Biographical Architecture

The framework of Biographical Architecture is informed by evolving cosmic archetypes³⁰. The potential of any archetype can grow, mutate or dissolve according to its use and interpretation. Generous application of familiar archetypes is fundamental to the creation of tools, instruments and applications which are dedicated to working with biographical development.

Ninety-Nine Years

Average life expectancy has been rising gradually: c. 35 years in the 18th C.; c. 50 years in the 19th C.; c. 65 years in 1950 and c. 75 years in 2000.

Longevity has always been influenced by familial, technological, economic, social, vocational, cultural and spiritual factors, as well as life-style and gender.

It is proposed here that a useful archetype for human biographical development in a modern Temple of Life encompasses a life span of 99 years constituting two Life Domains of 63 and 36 years.¹⁷

It is useful to consider these microcosmic³¹ periods of life in relation to macrocosmic³² architecture.

Sixty-Three Years³³

The life domain of 63 years may be divided further into nine 7-Year Life Phases, which are aligned with the Seven (visible) Planetary Realms.³⁴ link 11.1-19.3

Thirty-Six Years

Longevity brings unprecedented challenges, besides the growing potential to influence and manage the quality of life between birth and death. Questions about what it really means to live through one's 70s, 80s and 90s are no longer just relevant for the isolated or privileged minorities of the past.

Human beings search intensively for tools, instruments and applications to guide themselves beyond their current understanding about physical and mental aging. The need to know more about the purpose and potential of extending life and preparing for death is growing. Whilst reviewing their own contributions to the world, individuals are also 'dreaming' into the future of their planetary home. To be able to do this consciously, as a sacred service to coming generations and further incarnations of Humanity, requires the creative application of evolving archetypes for biographical development.

The Life Domain of 36 years (63-99) comprises twelve 3-Year Intervals, which can be aligned with the twelve zodiacal realms of the stars.³⁶ From birth to 63 the phenomenology of life unfolds through the linear progression of Time. After 63 biographical development encompasses the phenomenology of the encircling round of Space. link 20.3

Evaluating essential life achievement enables choice of which Three Year Interval can serve you best as a portal for 'entering the circle' of the zodiac at 63.

The way you then move along the many pathways between the twelve starry realms generates stories, a social artistic narrative, which becomes intimately a part of the creation of *Destiny Freedom*⁷ by your Individuality, now and for lives still to come in the future. link 6.3
